

MARK SCHEME for the October/November 2014 series

9084 LAW

9084/42

Paper 4, maximum raw mark 75

This mark scheme is published as an aid to teachers and candidates, to indicate the requirements of the examination. It shows the basis on which Examiners were instructed to award marks. It does not indicate the details of the discussions that took place at an Examiners' meeting before marking began, which would have considered the acceptability of alternative answers.

Mark schemes should be read in conjunction with the question paper and the Principal Examiner Report for Teachers.

Cambridge will not enter into discussions about these mark schemes.

Cambridge is publishing the mark schemes for the October/November 2014 series for most Cambridge IGCSE[®], Cambridge International A and AS Level components and some Cambridge O Level components.

Assessment Objectives

Candidates are expected to demonstrate:

Knowledge and Understanding

- recall, select, use and develop knowledge and understanding of legal principles and rules by means of example and citation.

Analysis, Evaluation and Application

- analyse and evaluate legal materials, situations and issues and accurately apply appropriate principles and rules.

Communication and Presentation

- use appropriate legal terminology to present logical and coherent argument and to communicate relevant material in a clear and concise manner.

Specification Grid

The relationship between the Assessment Objectives and this individual component is detailed below. The objectives are weighted to give an indication of their relative importance, rather than to provide a precise statement of the percentage mark allocation to particular assessment objectives.

Mark Bands

The mark bands and descriptors applicable to all questions on the paper are as follows. Maximum mark allocations are indicated in the table at the foot of the page.

Indicative content for each of the questions follows overleaf.

Band 1:

The answer contains no relevant material.

Band 2:

The candidate introduces fragments of information or unexplained examples from which no coherent explanation or analysis can emerge.

OR

The candidate attempts to introduce an explanation and/or analysis but it is so fundamentally undermined by error and confusion that it remains substantially incoherent.

Band 3:

The candidate begins to indicate some capacity for explanation and analysis by introducing some of the issues, but explanations are limited and superficial.

OR

The candidate adopts an approach in which there is concentration on explanation in terms of facts presented rather than through the development and explanation of legal principles and rules.

OR

The candidate attempts to introduce material across the range of potential content, but it is weak or confused so that no real explanation or conclusion emerges.

Band 4:

Where there is more than one issue, the candidate demonstrates a clear understanding of one of the main issues of the question, giving explanations and using illustrations so that a full and detailed picture is presented of this issue.

OR

The candidate presents a more limited explanation of all parts of the answer, but there is some lack of detail or superficiality in respect of either or both so that the answer is not fully rounded.

Section A

- 1 The distinction drawn between the primary and secondary victims suffering nervous shock as a consequence of negligence is unnecessary and unfair.

Explain the distinction between the two types of victim and assess the validity of this statement.

Candidates should define and explain the meaning of key terminology: nervous shock, primary and secondary victims, etc. The generally accepted requirements for liability to exist should be detailed and explored: reasonable foresight, nature of psychiatric injury, relationship with primary victim and proximity.

Candidates might then consider the Law Commission's view that it justified that there should be a close tie between primary and secondary victim and that this should remain. However, the belief of the Commission is that this should suffice and that the proximity in time, space and method of perception requirements be abolished. Candidates should express their views on this matter.

Each test should be explored, analysing decided cases in each area and drawing conclusions. Key cases such as White and Others (1998), Alcock v Chief Constable of Yorkshire Police (1997), McLoughlin v O'Brian (1982), Chadwick v British Railways Board (1967), Sion v Hampstead Health Authority (1994) should all be analysed.

This question could be approached from various angles and appropriate credit should be awarded whichever angle it is tackled from, however, would ordinarily expect emphasis placed on problems relating to the position of rescuers, closeness of relationship, proximity and or sudden shock requirements.

Candidates are expected to consider the fairness of the rules in particular cases. Consequently, responses that are limited to factual recall, however detailed, will be restricted to band 3 marks.

- 2 People are responsible for the consequences of their carelessness towards others.

Examine the development and application of the remoteness of damage principle through case law and discuss the extent to which you agree with this statement.

Candidates are expected to trace the development of the principle that has become known as remoteness of damage through cases mainly related to the tort of negligence, but candidates will be given credit for pulling examples from any other area of the law of tort.

The statement underlines the fact that although there will undoubtedly be circumstances where someone will cause damage or loss, but the law will not require that person to pay compensation for it. The difficulty has always been in determining what those circumstances are.

Candidates are expected to explain that the first test of remoteness was laid down in the case of re Polemis and that, in essence, liability was imposed for all direct physical consequences (direct consequence test).

The harsh line adopted in re Polemis was subsequently softened by the Privy Council in the case of The Wagon Mound No1. The new test for remoteness became that of whether the loss suffered was as a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the person's actions. Was the damage or loss of a type that was reasonably foreseeable at the time that the tort was committed?

Page 6	Mark Scheme	Syllabus	Paper
	Cambridge International A Level – October/November 2014	9084	42

Cases such as Doughty v Turner Manufacturing Co, Hughes v Lord Advocate, Page v Smith and Margerson v JW Roberts might be explored to indicate how the courts approach with regard to the type of loss or damage suffered as a consequence of negligent acts has become less narrow as time has progressed.

Candidates should also explore the application of the rule to extent of loss (eggshell-skull cases) and risk of damage.

The only sensible overall conclusion can be that the more recent cases seem to take a more generous line.

3 Contributory negligence and volenti non fit injuria are so similar in nature and effect that it is unnecessary for both defences to exist.

Critically analyse the defences and discuss the extent to which you agree with this statement.

Candidates should define the two terms and then go to discuss their respective features as remedies.

Volenti is the defence of consent and operates as a complete defence in appropriate cases and is not confined to any particular tort, although, like contributory negligence is frequently raised in the case of negligence claims. If deemed an appropriate defence, the effect is that no compensation is payable to the claimant.

The conditions of the defence should be explored: Voluntary assumption of known risks. Were the risks understood (Smith v Baker; ICI v Shatwell)? Can children consent to harm? What about sportsmen and sportswomen (Condon v Basi)? What about rescuers (Chadwick v British Railways Board)?

Candidates should recognise that unlike volenti, contributory negligence is only a partial defence which has the effect of reducing the amount of damages payable in accordance with the claimant's own degree of fault (Law Reform (Contributory Negligence) Act 1945).

Candidates must analyse what amounts to contributory negligence. Did the claimant take reasonable care for his own safety (Jones v Livox Quarries)? Was the claimant's action reasonable (Sayers v Harlow UDC)? What about children (Gough v Thorne)?

Candidates must analyse the two defences and assess the degree of similarity and contrast between them. Responses that are limited to factual recall, however detailed, will be restricted to band 3 marks.

Section B

4 Assess Nicholls' potential liability in tort for the losses sustained by Kennedy. [25]

Candidates should immediately recognize that this scenario brings into question the tort of negligence as might arise in a medical setting.

Candidates will be credited for a brief outline the three elements of negligence as a tort (duty of care, breach of duty and resultant loss).

Focus should then switch very swiftly to start an analysis of the standard of care expected in areas where defendants exercise special skill or knowledge. Case law must be examined (e.g. Bolam, Bolitho, Marriott v W Midlands Regional Health Authority, Chester v Afshar).

The principles must then be applied to the scenario and conclusions drawn. Principal issues to be tackled include whether or not Nicholls carried out the operation negligently and the extent to which he might or might have been negligent in not advising Kennedy of the risk before he agreed to undergo the operation which resulted in his paralysis.

Credit should be awarded for a discussion of consent as possible for Nicholls.

Whatever conclusions are reached they should be clear, compelling and fully supported by references to case law. Candidate responses which consist of only very superficial application of the law to the issues within the scenario will receive maximum marks within band 3.

5 Assess the Quasar Club's liability towards Petra in the tort of private nuisance and consider any remedies that might be awarded against it should she decide to sue the club. [25]

The question posed specifically points up private nuisance. No credit will be given for the introduction of material from other torts.

Candidates might introduce their response by briefly defining private nuisance as a tort: an indirect interference with the use or enjoyment of land in the possession of another. Candidates should discuss the potential basis for liability:

- Only actionable on proof of actual loss.
- Generally needs to be continuous state of affairs to give rise to a cause of action.
- Interference must be substantial to give rise to liability.
- Must be an unreasonable interference.

In this case, the Quasar Club and its activities existed prior to Petra's house being built. The Club might contend that she came to the nuisance and therefore has no grounds for complaint (Sturgess v Bridgman). When did the Club's activities become an issue for Petra? How long has she put up with the alleged nuisance and how often is it a nuisance anyway? Might she be considered to be over-sensitive to the noise? The issue is one of balancing the interests of both parties involved (Bolton v Stone; Miller v Jackson).

Page 8	Mark Scheme	Syllabus	Paper
	Cambridge International A Level – October/November 2014	9084	42

If Petra is successful in establishing that the Club's activities amount to a private nuisance, the main remedy that she will endeavour to obtain would be an injunction aimed at stopping Quasar Club's activities that cause the nuisance. Such a remedy would only be granted at the court's discretion if damages were considered inappropriate in the circumstances. The injunction could be perpetual and stop the Club's activities altogether or partial. In Kennaway v Thompson the defendant was restrained from just those activities that caused the nuisance; might the court follow suit in this instance?

Whatever conclusion is reached it should be clear, compelling and fully supported. Candidate responses which consist of only very superficial application of the law to the issues within the scenario will receive maximum marks within band 3.

6 Assess the Council's potential liability under the Occupier's Liability Acts 1957 & 1984 for Sukhwinder's injuries.

Analyse whether or not any action that she might bring could be successfully defended.

[25]

This scenario addresses the issue of an occupier's liability for injuries sustained by entrants to their premises. Nature reserves are, by definition, places where members of the public are invited to spend recreation time. It would appear therefore that Sukhwinder would have entered the reserve as a visitor and as such, Newtown Council would owe her a duty of care to ensure her reasonable safety in the park (Occupiers Liability Act 1957). Candidates should examine the common duty of care imposed by S2(2) and consider whether or not that duty had been discharged.

Candidates should then consider whether in fact, by swimming in the pond, when notices had been clearly displayed by the Council to ban swimming, Sukhwinder had in fact become a trespasser? The Court of Appeal's decision in the case of Tomlinson v Congleton would seem to suggest so. Consequently, candidates should recognize the application of the Occupiers Liability Act 1984 and examine whether the duties imposed by S1(3) have been complied with by the Council. Would the notices be sufficient to absolve the Council from liability?

Whatever conclusion is reached it should be clear, compelling and fully supported. Candidate responses which consist of only very superficial application of the law to the issues within the scenario will receive maximum marks within band 3.
